PREFACE

Introduction

Regarded as the single-most commonly sighted extraterrestrial creature, the “Grey” Alien has become a mainstream media icon and popular symbol used to represent intelligent life from outer space. Interestingly enough, it appears that over the past twenty two decades, there has been a massive amount of information gathered from a wide variety of eye witness reports and subsequent investigations that allow us to better understand the confusing details surrounding Grey Aliens and their nature. In this book, you will find a collection of individual witness reports describing direct sightings of Grey Alien creatures, alongside a collection of recovered facts and scientific discoveries surrounding the impossible to explain humanoids.

Grey Alien Description & Theory

When it comes to their physiological characteristics, the Grey Alien species is consistently described as being an average of three to four feet in height, having pinkish skin, possessing humanoid facial features of which are described as having large eyes, small mouths, tiny holes on either side of the head believed to be ear canals and large oval-shaped heads with an enlarged cranium. Similar to humans, the Grey Aliens appear to be child-like in their physical proportions, with a dramatic head-to-body ratio, and typical humanoid body shape, featuring two arms, with five fingers on each hand, and two feet.

SIGHTINGS

Reports Of The Grey Alien

Regarded as the single-most commonly sighted extraterrestrial creature, the “Grey” Alien has become a mainstream media icon and popular symbol used to represent intelligent life from outer space. Interestingly enough, it appears that over the past twenty two decades, there has been a massive amount of information gathered from a wide variety of eye witness reports and subsequent investigations that allow us to better understand the confusing details surrounding Grey Aliens and their nature.

When it comes to their physiological characteristics, the Grey Alien species is consistently described as being an average of three to four feet in height, having pinkish skin, possessing humanoid facial features of which are described as having large eyes, small mouths, tiny holes on either side of the head believed to be ear canals and large oval-shaped heads with an enlarged cranium. Similar to humans, the Grey Aliens appear to be child-like in their physical proportions, with a dramatic head-to-body ratio, and typical humanoid body shape, featuring two arms, with five fingers on each hand, and two feet.

The major differences between the Grey Aliens and Humans are realized when analyzing the inner cavity of the species when compared to the Human anatomy. According to top secret documents surrounding recovered Grey Alien bodies for the purpose of autopsy, the Grey Aliens appear to lack any kind of bones within or outside of their body, with mention of only a mild form of cartilage to serve the purpose of bone structures. The prevailing theory holds that perhaps at some stage in their evolutionary history, Grey Aliens did possess bone-like structures, but were in some way removed, adapted or gene-edited into cartilage to prevent organ failure when subjected to sudden and dramatic impulse speeds. The theory arose when analyzing how Humans could potentially handle sudden G-force accelerations close to several hundred G's of impulse speed if their body was to be suspended inside of a large tank of water that matched the density of the human body, allowing the majority of the force of the acceleration to be dispersed across a much larger volume; however, tests revealed that the density differences between the bones and all other structures in the body would cause the bones to rupture the surrounding organs when subjected to sudden G-force accelerations. From this study, it is believed that Grey Aliens once contained bone-like structures throughout their body, but subjected themselves to rapid evolutionary or biological changes to remove these bone-like structures to allow for their bodies to handle tremendous and sudden changes in acceleration. Although difficult to explain, it appears that the rest of the Grey Aliens anatomy (including inner organs, brain structure and genitalia) appears to directly match Human beings, with the inclusion of typical intestines, a stomach, a heart, lungs and brain.

It has also been noted that in every case of a recovered Grey Alien body, the genitalia of the creature seemed to always be similar to that of a female human's genitalia, with only inner reproductive organs being observed such as a small cavity, without any known reporting of male genitalia having been viewed. Theories have been posited that the small cavity could also contain male genitalia, that have been retracted inside the body of the Grey Alien, as it could very well be that their genitalia differs from a human beings typical organ development. However, certain extraterrestrial researchers have posited the possibility that all Grey Aliens are entirely female. It has been gathered that there appear to be consistent reports of Grey Aliens having been created through cloning processes, with many eyewitnesses detailing the existence of artificial wombs and baby Grey Aliens appearing to have been packaged in small containers. Even within human populations, if the female population were to remove their own egg cells and fertilize them with their own DNA, they would be able to clone themselves and perpetuate their genetics, with little genetic variation taking place with each cloned offspring.

It is due to these physical similarities as well as information gathered from commonly reported occurrences that it is believed that Grey Aliens share DNA with their human counterparts, either partially or wholly. It could very well be that Grey Aliens, at some point in their evolutionary history, were entirely human or may have come about from a distant ancestor of the human race.

Far more difficult to explain, however, is that of the behavior and deduced psychology of the Grey Alien species, as data concerning their behavior can only be gathered from specific conditions and eyewitness claims. According to the majority of abduction victims able to make contact with or directly observe the behavior of Grey Aliens, the Grey alien species consistently demonstrates telepathic abilities, predominantly used in communication and thought transference. In all reported cases of individuals making contact with Grey Aliens, contactees appear to be given raw information through their mind through the total transference of concepts, desires, images or mathematical concepts but never in the form of language or specific words in their language. It could very well be that Grey Aliens are not aware of our language and/or do not ever communicate within the confines of verbal speech and so have perfected a universal form of communication in which thought transference allows for the complete understanding of intention without the misinterpretation that learning languages can cause. Such an ability can imply that Grey Aliens are able to maintain contact with more than just each other, and the human race, and are able to communicate freely with all complex and intelligent life. This does imply the possibility that the Grey Alien telepathic form of communication did not arise naturally or through evolutionary patterns, but were rather manufactured, either as a technology or through gene editing, to engage in communication with many other intelligent alien species, implying the collaboration between the Grey Aliens and other alien life forms.

Perhaps it is due to their telepathic nature that another consistent behavior has been observed, or it is evidence of telepathy having been evolved through natural processes, but it has been found within consistent reports that the Grey Alien species demonstrates an impossible-to-explain hive mind mentality as compared to the human race. According to a number of witness reports, Grey Aliens appear to travel in groups, with abduction events being entirely consistent with stories of typically four to six Grey Aliens travelling together to restrain a human being and forcibly drag them into one of their nearby vehicles. It is during these moments and at all moments following such encounters that abduction victims have often described the Grey Aliens moving in complete unison, as if operating with just one mind in control. A small percentage of abduction cases also make mention of what are described as another alien species referred to as Mantid Beings, of which hold an eerily similar appearance to the common Preying Mantis insect. In nearly all cases involving Mantid Beings, abduction victims and contactees claim that the Mantid Beings appear to be in complete control over the Grey Aliens, with the Grey Aliens seeming to take on the role of Workers under the control of the Mantid Beings. It is due to this information that extraterrestrial researchers believe that the Grey Aliens could be acting as the muscle, whereas the Mantid Beings are the ones truly in charge and are in complete control of the Grey Aliens telepathically from a distance away.

The final psychological note is that of the Grey Aliens alleged lack of total emotion. According to many of the abduction victims that have gone through immensely painful surgical procedures at the hands of Grey Aliens, throughout the entire telepathic contact, the Grey Alien species will exhibit no form of emotion, surprise, empathy or strong reactions of any kind. Consistent reports describe the sense telepathic mind as endlessly curious, lacking any form of emotion whatsoever. Given the difficulty in explaining the hive mind nature of the Grey Aliens, along with their perceived worker role purpose alongside a telepathic controller, it has been theorized that the Grey Alien species is far more similar in design and purpose to that of an organic robot, genetically engineered from possible human DNA.

In all reported cases involving the sighting of Grey Aliens, there are notable pieces of technology that are also consistently witnessed alongside the Grey Alien species. The most iconic of these observations is that of the Flying Saucer. According to thousands of eyewitness reports, the main method of transportation used by the Grey Alien species is a saucer-shaped aircraft capable of levitation, dramatic impulse speeds capable of reaching several G's within a split second, advanced cloaking technologies that allow the craft to be rendered invisible in all known electromagnetic spectrums, the ability to generate sudden noise-cancelling frequencies that can completely silence the immediate areas surrounding the craft, and a tremendous control over electromagnetic phenomena such as being able to generate an electromagnetic pulse that can fry or temporarily disable electronic equipment, the ability to cause paralysis in nearby animals or people and the ability to suddenly magnetize nearby metals.

It has also been claimed that the Flying Saucer aircraft has the ability to travel between the atmosphere, space, and underwater without any noticeable reduction in speed or strain. This could imply that the propulsion of the Flying Saucer could be caused through manipulation of surrounding gravitational fields and not through natural propulsion methods. Additionally, researchers claim that because of a Flying Saucer's common sighting of being able to suddenly disappear, it could be evidence of interdimensional travel being used by the aircraft, however, it could be equally as likely that the Flying Saucer merely engaged an active cloaking device. In specific crashed UFO cases, Flying Saucers appeared to have taken no damage even when subjected to massive strains of energy, heat or force, though the inside occupants may have suffered from tremendous sudden deceleration and perished inside. Given the incredible level of strain a Saucer Craft can endure, it is theorized that the material of the Saucer could not be using mere molecular bonds for their construction.

It appears that at the tremendous amounts of force experienced, a Flying Saucer must be using a form of the "Strong" force to be holding itself together, a force more than 137 times stronger than electromagnetism, a million times stronger than the weak force and 10 to the 39th power stronger than gravity itself. There is no known technology or method that we are aware of that would allow for the use of the Strong Force in engineering beyond the nucleic scale, however, and so some researchers believe that the integrity of the craft could be a binding force created via electromagnetic principles.

It appears that when boarding or leaving their craft, the Grey Aliens are often seen using a form of levitation technologies. Commonly reported as floating down from a craft or floating back up into the craft, Grey Aliens seem capable of independent levitation only when a flying saucer is nearby. Additionally, stories of Grey Aliens levitating into rooms, through ceilings or walls, implies a form of dimensionally travel that allows matter to phase through other matter without any complications.

Although, there is still a continual debate surrounding the physical characteristics of Grey Aliens, it is generally believed that the Grey Skin often cited by eyewitness accounts are more accurately skin-tight suits worn by the Grey

Aliens, with the true naked appearance of the creatures being pinkish skin. In cases of dramatic contact, the grey suits of the alien creatures appear to be impenetrable to any known firearm. Additionally, it is believed that the commonly sighted large black eyes are more accurately black lenses over the eyes of the creatures, with their naked eye being far more similar in appearance to a human eye.

The Abduction of
Antonio Vilas Boas 1957

Working as a farmer, back in October of 1957, Antonio Vilas Boas would go on to be one of the first reported alien abduction encounters, with not only the overwhelming evidence to prove his claims, but also as one of the main reports that helped to develop further evidence for the Alien Hybrid theory. According to his alien abduction report, on the night of October 15th, 1957, Antonio Vilas Boas and his brother were out working in their fields when they began to notice a bright red light in the night sky. Originally, they had believed the light to have been a form of aircraft, but then as time went on, assumed that given its stationary position in the sky, it was most likely a star they had never noticed before. They would finish a portion of the fields that night with no further incident.

On the night of October 16th, 1957, Antonio Vilas Boas was out working in his fields without the help of his brother, well after the sun had set once again, to avoid the scorching temperatures of the daytime. He was well-equipped to work throughout the night, as he had done many times before, sitting on his tractor and ploughing his fields for the next few hours. Oddly enough, as Antonio was working, he then claimed to see the same bright red star that he had witnessed on the previous night, hovering overhead. Although the bright red star was an anomaly, he wasn't too worried by it as he and his brother had already seen the red light on the previous night, to which it seemingly displayed no strange patterns other than having moved a few times before. Unfortunately, however, Antonio Vilas Boas was alone, without the aid of his brother, and so the situation would not be the same as the previous day.

He continued to work, unsure of what he was seeing, keeping an eye on the strange red star seemingly unmoving across the sky but appearing brighter and closer than the previous night. A few more moments passed before he began to notice that the red star was growing in size. Worried it could be any number of things, he quickly stopped working and looked over at the bright red light trying to figure out what it could have been. He then began to realize that the bright red star wasn't growing in size but that it was definitely some form of an aircraft quickly approaching his position. It was not long before he could make out the shape of the craft; a roughly circular or egg-shaped aerial craft with a bright red light at the front and a strange rotating tower protruding from the top, as the entire aircraft seemingly hovered without any visible mechanisms for propulsion.

As the aircraft began to descend near the location of Antonio Vilas Boas, it began to protrude three extended legs to support the craft as it landed in the nearby fields. After seeing the craft descend, Antonio Vilas Boas quickly put his tractor into gear and tried to leave the area as fast as he could. After only a few seconds, however, his tractor completely died, as all of the lights on the tractor shut off and its engine suddenly stopped. Believing the strange aircraft to have been responsible for the sudden shut-off, Antonio quickly jumped from the tractor and began running on foot through the fields, away from the landed craft.

As Antonio was running, falling in and out of the soft, recently ploughed field, he was quickly captured by a small, five foot tall, humanoid creature, wearing grey coveralls and a helmet. Though it is not specified whether or not the creature's helmet was that of a completely airtight system, or merely a protective gear worn on the head, Antonio Vilas Boas does not specify that he was able to see the entirety of the humanoids' face that grabbed him. He only states that he noticed its eyes were small and blue and that, as it spoke, it made noises similar to that of a bark or yelping sound.

Shortly after the first humanoid seized Antonio, three more humanoids of similar description joined in and subdued him, rapidly dragging him by force inside of their aircraft as he fought to try to get away. Once dragged inside, the humanoid creatures then began to take Antonio's clothes off as they then began to cover him from head to toe in a gelatinous compound.

After being completely covered by the gelatinous compound, Antonio then described an overwhelming feeling of calmness that prevented him from fighting back, leaving many to assume that the strange gelatinous compound had some sort of drug-like effect on him. As he entered this new docile state, the humanoid figures led him towards a large semicircular room through a tight doorway that had a number of mysterious red symbols written all over it. It was at this point, when Antonio entered the room, that the true nature of the humanoid figures became obvious.

The figures began to take samples of blood from Antonio's chin, leaving behind a deep mark that would later prove as evidence of the encounter, as the scar would last for over two years before properly healing. These figures then led him into a third room where they pumped a large amount of gas into the chamber that made Antonio violently ill. As Antonio was gasping for breath, believing he would soon be killed, he saw the main door into the chamber open with a naked female humanoid creature standing in front of him.

The female humanoid creature was described by Antonio Vilas Boas as being five feet tall, a height that was similar to the other beings he had encountered. The female humanoid also seemed to possess large, blue, cat-like eyes that made her appear to be inhuman. Additional facial features included a small, pointed chin. On her head she had long, platinum-blonde hair and had visible hair on her underarm and groin that were bright red.

Shortly after entering the chamber, the female humanoid then began to force sexual acts upon Antonio Vilas Boas, making a number of animalistic groans that he claimed scared and disgusted him as the creature began to bite at his chin. When they were finished, Antonio Vilas Boas describes a feeling of terrible disgust washing over him as the creature began to rub her stomach and then point upwards. Leading him to believe that she was explaining that she would become pregnant with his child and raise it on a different planet.

Following this experience, Antonio was then given back his clothes by the other humanoids and was given a tour of the ship. While taking this tour, he had attempted to steal a small clock-like device to show proof of his encounter with the alien race, but was quickly caught by the aliens and was immediately escorted off of the ship.

As the ship left, he returned home to find that more than four hours had passed since the ship touched down, one of the strange side effects he would soon begin experiencing. Following the alien encounter, Antonio began showing signs of extreme radiation sickness. Unaware of what was happening, with growing lesions, nasua, weakness and terrible headaches, he quickly sought help from a journalist researching alien abductions and was examined by Dr. Olavo Fontes of the National School of Medicine of Brazil. Antonio had originally believed he had caught a form of extraterrestrial STD but was informed that he was suffering from a sickness caused by taking massive doses of radiation at one time.

Written in Dr. Olavo Fontes' report is the following:

"Among [Boas's] symptoms were 'pains throughout the body, nausea, headaches, loss of appetite, ceaselessly burning sensations in the eyes, cutaneous lesions at the slightest of light bruising...which went on appearing for months, looking like small reddish nodules, harder than the skin around them and protuberant, painful when touched, each with a small central orifice yielding a yellowish thin waterish discharge.' The skin surrounding the wounds presented 'a hyperchromatic violet-tinged area."

Such levels of radiation sickness would have been impossible to have been exposed to during this time, in the 1950's, and would have required Antonio to have gotten hit by direct doses of radiation equal to the amount that would later be experienced at the chernobyl incident in Ukraine not until the 1980's, overwhelmingly proving advanced technologies had been within the vicinity of Antonio Vilas Boas within the span of time he had claimed the alien abduction event to have occurred.

Imjarvi Humanoid Encounters 1970

During the late evening on the 7th of January, back in 1970, two men, Woodman Einonen and Esko Viljo, were skiing around the village of Imjarvi in Southern Finland when the two suddenly heard a bizarre buzzing sound that grew louder. Looking up into the late evening sky, the two men noticed a light slowly approaching their direction. As the object hovered about twelve feet overhead, the two men described the craft as being disk-shaped with a flat underside, having a metallic exterior, featuring a dome at the top of the craft with three domes spaced equidistantly along the lower edges of the craft with a strange whirling reddish grey mist that seemed to cloak the saucer.

As they watched the craft hovering, they noticed a beam of light projecting from beneath the craft into a tube-like shape that would shine on and off several times. As they watched the light, the men suddenly felt what they described as a person grabbing them by the waist and pushing them away from the craft as a small humanoid creature was seen standing in the middle of the tube of light. The creature was described as being child-like in appearance, standing at about three feet tall, wearing a cone-shaped metallic helmet, green overalls, green boots and had pale skin that looked like candle wax. It is important to note that the men never describe the alien as appearing to be similar to the traditional Grey Aliens described by most alien encounters, but rather more as a human child with slightly alien-like features.

The men continue that the humanoid alien appeared to have been holding a small black box that was said to emit a yellowish glow from inside, similar to how a box containing a lightbulb will emit light from the tiny openings in the edges. The creature then turned the box towards Heinonen like a weapon and the reddish grey mist that surrounded the unidentified flying object began to move as bright sparks began to shoot up from the illuminated snow beneath and around the craft. As the sparks struck against Heinonen, however, they left no damage and were believed to have been completely holographic. Suddenly the creature disappeared before the beam of light went back up into the dome part of the craft and the flying saucer flew away.

Oddly enough, at around the same time as the two men's encounter, nearby villagers also claimed to have seen the intense light of the strange craft that landed in the forest, lending to the credibility of the encounter. One of the witnesses, a woman named Elna Siitari claimed that she saw the intense sparks and radiant lights from Paistjarvi, more than ten miles away but did not know what to think of them during the time of the sighting. Another witness, a young boy that remains unnamed, also claimed to have seen the bright lights all the way from Paaso, more than six miles in the opposite direction of the event.

The encounter with the alien had unforeseen effects on the two men in different ways, some immediately after the encounter and others felt over the years. The first visible effect was that Heinonen experienced temporary paralysis in the entire right side of his body, with his friend needing to assist and carry him all the way back home. The two men would go on to claim that they would suffer from future encounters, sightings of saucers in the sky, and other direct encounters that were impossible to verify but just as haunting. Heinonen reported that a blonde alien, that fit the description of the commonly sighted nordic alien species, appeared to him and when he tried to photograph the encounter, the alien suddenly disappeared from in front of him, forcing him to question his mental health and sanity.

The most peculiar future incident after the Imjarvi event would come about when the two men, accompanied by a Swedish journalist, an interpreter and a photographer, would journey back to the location of their initial encounter and experience an almost supernatural phenomenon. As the two men were telling their story, the three others suddenly began to notice their hands glowing an intense bright red. As this occurred, Heinonen suffered a head-splitting migraine and nearly passed out. The event forced the group to flee from the spot and never return.

What makes this incident even more peculiar, however, is that a similar incident, involving two other Finnish locals, would occur a little over a year later on the 5th of February 1971 that mirrored the Imjarvi encounter. According to the two witnesses, Petter Aliranta and Eska Sneck, it was a little after three pm when they encountered an extraterrestrial craft. The two men were lumberjacks by trade and had remarked that the day ended early due to a severe snowstorm that was slowly rolling in. As they were packing up their equipment, Petter Aliranta noticed the metallic saucer hovering only a few inches above the top of the nearby treeline. The two men described the alien craft as appearing to be two saucers on top of each other with four extended legs on its underside. As the craft descended, a circular doorway opened on the middle-bottom of the craft, as the ship rested roughly fifty-five feet away from the two men.

At this point, only Aliranta had spotted the craft and had yet to make any noise to alert his partner who was still busy packing up the lumbering equipment. Suddenly, a humanoid creature, estimated at being about three feet tall, wearing a green one piece outfit that was described as being similar in design to an old-time scuba uniform with an enlarged helmet, floated down from the circular opening in the craft and began making its way towards the two men. In fear for his life, Aliranta started up his chainsaw, alerting his partner as to the craft and suddenly began charging at the alien creature with all his strength. Realizing what was transpiring, Aliranta's partner, Eska Sneck, also grabbed his chainsaw and began to advance on the craft alongside Aliranta, ready to fight against the alien intruders.

The two men claim that as the creature had been walking in their direction, it had been making slow hops similar to how humans would walk on the surface of the moon under lunar gravity. As the men began to charge the creature with revving chainsaws, however, the humanoid figure quickly turned around and began to run back towards its ship. Advancing on the ship, the two men claimed they could see more alien humanoid creatures inside the peculiar craft motioning towards the fleeing alien as the craft began to hover and retract its legs. Before the three foot tall humanoid could reach the craft, Aliranta lunged towards the humanoid, throwing his chainsaw to the side, and grabbed onto the small creature in the hopes of wrestling it to the ground. As he grabbed onto the extraterrestrial, however, Aliranta remarked that he felt an electrical shock, described as being a jolt of pure pain that was similar to a hot iron entering his hand, forcing him to remove his grip from the creature.

The alien then floated up into the craft as gusts of wind suddenly propelled the men backwards, as the craft lifted and took off into the sky. The two men remarked that as they laid in the snow, they suffered from a temporary paralysis before they could move again after about an hour's time, with the fear that the snow would soon bury them if they were not able to move for much longer. Local newspapers and investigations would also remark about the strange injury Aliranta possessed on his arm that was described as remaining "volatile" for several months following the incident.

As one can easily notice, these strange humanoid encounters, spaced a little over a year from each other, hold startling coincidences with each other, despite being isolated incidents with neither parties being aware of the other before their respective sightings. The comparisons of green-colored uniforms, a height of about three feet, and two-men groups encountering craft that approach them in the middle of snowy forests is not all that can be made. There appears to be a strange ability that the beings possess of causing temporary paralysis in witnessing parties as either a defense mechanism or a byproduct of the craft levitating away.

There are few known scientific causes of temporary paralysis in individuals, but one of the most well-known causes is that of partial damage to human nervous systems or misfiring signals from the brain to the nervous system. Similar to how REM sleep will temporary cause the body to undergo paralysis to prevent an individual from kicking out in their sleep, could the electromagnetic fields caused by alien craft have an adverse effect on the human nervous system that causes it to temporarily enter into a paralysis when exposed to its radiating field? Countless accounts of extraterrestrial encounters in the past have often remarked that close encounters with alien craft have often led to neurological problems. Could this be evidence of a form of neurological control or influence? Until more sightings and data is gathered, it is impossible to know for certain.

The Abduction of Judy Doraty 1973

A recurring theme surrounding that of extraterrestrial abduction stories is that many alien abductees are unaware of being victims of an abduction until therapeutic hypnosis allows them to unlock repressed memories seemingly locked away from their conscious minds. This also appears to be the case with the witness account of Judy Doraty.

According to the Doraty case, back in 1973, four witnesses were travelling home to Texas City when they encountered a strange light that was described as hovering above them in the night sky. The four witnesses, Judy Doraty, her daughter Cindy, Judy's mother and Judy's sister in law, all exited the vehicle to get a better look at the strange hovering craft. Despite nothing happening, the group of people claimed they felt as if a long period of time had passed despite having no recollection of the time and, shortly after this unexplainable time confusion, the light began to hover away and then disappear into the distance.

Immediately following the event, Judy Doraty and several of the members of the group began complaining of severe migraine headaches, generalized anxiety and trouble sleeping following the encounter. After visiting a handful of doctors, all of whom believed that the systems were most likely physical manifestations of stress, Judy Doraty visited with Dr. Leo Sprinkle, a well known Ufologist and trained hypnotist, to help alleviate her stress. Once under hypnosis, Judy Doraty began to uncover repressed memories of an alien abduction encounter that took place during the sighting that the four witnesses made only several weeks prior.

According to Doraty, and later corroborated by her daughter after she had also undergone hypnosis therapy, the four women were taken aboard the craft and witnessed two small alien entities perform a series of surgeries and experiments. The event began as Judy Doraty claimed, while under hypnosis, that she felt the impossible feeling of being in two places at once, as if holding conflicting memories of her standing outside of her car while her alternate memory recounts being taken up into the alien ship, as if the memories of her standing beside the car were implanted over her real memories of abduction. She would provide the additional statement surrounding their abduction and ascension into the vehicle via a light made out of strange substance:

"It's like a spotlight shining down on the back of my car. And it's like it has substance to it. I can see an animal being taken up in this. I can see it squirming and trying to get free. And It's like it's being sucked up."

The first experiment they witnessed was of the small entities cutting apart a cow and removing its organs for study. Throughout the experiment, the women claimed that they could feel the thoughts and emotions of the small alien entities and could feel how robotic and inhuman they were. Judy Doraty herself claimed that the alien creatures possessed no form of empathy and were merely curious creatures with no concept of emotional bias when it came to the pained screams of the bovine creature during its mutilation, causing her own fear to grow that the alien creatures were capable of far more sinister actions without a conscience.

Following the cow mutilation, Judy Doraty claimed to have seen her daughter being placed on the operating table as the aliens began taking a variety of samples from her, however, Judy nor the daughter would go into detail about the nature of the operation or what they witnessed, with her only statement being the following quote:

"They don't listen, they just ignore me…. Go about their work as if it's nothing. They don't seem to have any emotions. They don't seem to care. They just take some samples from her…"

Once the hypnosis therapy was finished, Judy's symptoms cleared up almost immediately and she remarked that normalcy resumed back into her life as her anxiety was nearly completely alleviated. Although skeptics have continued to deny her claims, all witnesses confirm each others stories and leave behind a grave warning that visiting alien life is far more sinister not because of some sadistic pleasure, but because the entities are far less human than anyone could have ever imagined and will do anything they wish to satiate their own curiosity, even if such actions lead to the harm of those around them.

Brazilian Operation Prato

Surprisingly, reports of alien sightings and strange orbs of light have often been claimed in certain areas of the Amazon Rainforest that have been referred to as alien hotspots by certain extraterrestrial investigation communities and U.F.O. researchers. One of these hotspots, located near the Mamaus region of the Amazon, was known for having the highest frequency of strange sightings and extraterrestrial encounters. This proved to be the case when two British tourists were visiting the region and caught high definition footage of an alien presence.

According to Michael Cohen, a prominent paranormal and extraterrestrial investigator of whom first received the footage, the two tourists were spending time with a local family while preparing their camera to take high quality pictures of the local family to add to their photo album. As they turned the camera on, there was a sudden flash of light as they noticed a strange figure standing in the background. After reviewing the footage, a still image was taken that showed overwhelming proof of a Grey alien arching its back and standing in the forest behind them as an orb of light followed closely behind.

Many skeptics were quick to dismiss the footage as a hoax after they deemed the quality to be so defined and high detail that the image had to have been completely faked to get such a good quality picture, of which seems to be a rather ridiculous explanation for such overwhelmingly high quality evidence of the alien presence. Oddly enough, a few weeks after the event, the Brazilian government declassified a wide variety of secret high level files regarding extraterrestrial investigation made by the government and a team of secret investigators.

These files detailed an military operation known as Operation Prato that detailed evidence of the Brazilian government sending out military units to monitor and confirm an alien presence in the Mamaus region of the Amazon Rainforest, at the exact spot that the footage was taken by the British tourists only a few weeks prior to the declassification of the files. Though the Brazilian government had often denied the existence of Operation Prato in the past, it appears that after the footage went public, the government was unable to maintain the secret and declassified files regarding the matter; helping to solidify the evidence as official and not that of a hoax or edited picture.
